FOR STALE BREAD.

The Demand Increases as Fresh Loaves Go Higher.

An Extremity to Which the Poorer People Are Driven.

This Brend Trouble Is Felt Among Rich Customers, Too.

Before daylight this morning, those members of the German Boss Bakers' Associa tion who could not, or who did not think it wise to attend the conference in the German Masonic Temple, 215 East Fifteenth street, yesterday forenoon, were reading the papers to find out how much their associates had decided to increase the price of bread, so that they could act accordingly. Many were keenly disappointed to learn that it had only been thought advisable to tax the staff of life a cent per loaf more.

In many instances they had practically done so on their own account by reducing the weight of their loaves from two to four

Still, they consoled themselves with the reflection that they need not return to the old standard of weight, while they could increase the price a cent, thus making bread about three cents per loaf dearer than it was ten days ago.

When the young sons and daughters of the poor went hurrying with their nickel for the breakfast loaf, therefore, they were told that five-cent bread was a thing of the past. 'The cheapest bread now is six cents," they learned.

Back home the children went for the extra cent. In some cases they could not get it. When it happened this way they were told to

When it happened this way they were told to go back and buy state bread.

Stale bread became very popular to-day. Every baker says so. It is bread that is a day or two old, which the baker could not dispose of when fresh, and it is sold for a cent off the first price. It is not very plentiful, either, Bakers usually know just how much bread they can sell and bake as little more than the required amount as possible, so many families, to-day, hungered a little for bread.

The drivers for the big bakers who deliver their bread to the small grocers about town, were industriously circulating the report that their bread had not been increased in price, nor reduced in weight. The last statement is false, according to the grocers.

ment is false, according to the grocers.

After reading the article in The Evening Wonld last week the grocers weighed their bread and found out that the loaves had been scaled off from one to three ounces in weight.

The poor are not the only ones who have been made to feel that the action of Hutchin-son and other speculators in the commodities of life have a vital interest for them. A large number of bakers whose trade is of A large number of bakers whose trade is of the first class, have a system of checks for their customers, after the common fashion of milkmen. They have been selling seventeen bread tickets for a dollar. Last Saturday they notified their customers that, beginning to-day, only fifteen tickets would be given for a dollar.

the families of the people who are considered well-to-do these latter, of late years, have, in a great measure, taken the place of bread at the breakfast and tea tables. Formerly they were sold at the rate of fifteen or sixteen for 10 cents. To-day they are a cent apiece-ten

Are the people complaining?
Indeed they are, rich and poor alike. They feel that, according to their own statements, the bakers were making large profits a few weeks ago when flour was as low as $4 a bar-zel, and that now they should be willing to do with less, for a while at least. They think much of Baker Otto Schinkel's maive declaration in the bakers' mass-meet-ing vesterday, when he said.

maive declaration in the bakers' mass-meeting yesterday, when he said:
"If the bakers do not raise the price of bread, the public will surely get the impresston that it has been robbed by the bakers in years gone by, when flour was so very cheap," And they think that is really about the only reason which now induces the bakers to go to reducing weight and raising prices.

There are a number of bakers on Third wenue who are not members of the Associa tion. They did not raise the price of their bread last week, but they reduced the weight f loaves considerably.

An Evening world reporter interviewed a number of them this morning. They were loath to admit that they could even pay expenses without making the bread smaller while not reducing the price.

"Are your customers complaining?"

"They are, indeed. If I raised the price a cent I verily believe they would all leave me. They would sooner have the bread lightened than pay a cent more a loaf."

"Have you a demand for stale bread?"

"Yes, lately I have a large demand for it. There are a number of Italians of the better class in this vicinity. They are great bread eaters. When their weight of bread was reduced they took to eating stale bread, and I have a big demand for it every day now."

"Do you expect to raise the price of your bread also?"

Chief of the Prisoners.

He Was One of a Little Dinner Party in St. Mark's Place.

The police of the Fourteenth Precinct arrested, about 2 o'clock this morning, the man who is believed to be the murderer of Antonio Flacconio, the Italian grocer who was stabbed to death in such a mysterious manner in front of the Eighth street entrance of Cooper Union last evening.

The only clue upon which the officers had to work was the description of the supposed murderer given by three witnesses of the affair, who said they saw the man walk rapidly away after the stabbing was done They were all agreed that the mysterious person was a large man, with a dark mustache, and wore the two Italians began about 8, 45 last evening. The two men were standing at the southwest corner of Eighth street and Third avenue, just east of the main entrance to Cooper Union. They talked excitedly in Italian and gesticulated so violently that they attracted the attention of many passers by. This lasted for some moments, when Garrity noticed that the two were scuffling, and a moment after the stouter one staggered towards the gutter and fell down.

The other man walked off rapidly down St. Mark's place and it was thought that he entered an Italian restaurant at No. 8. As soon as it was discovered that Flacconio had been stabbed the police were called, but the man died before an ambulance could be summoned. Within a few few feet of him was found a villainous looking carving knife, sharpened to a point, and it is believed that the stabbing was done with this weapon, although no blood was found upon it.

All that the detectives of the Fifth street squad could learn last night was that Flacconio lived at 607 Third avenue, had two young children; that he had been a widower since March last, and was a clerk in the grocery store of an Italian named Manasco. The murderer had disappeared completely, leaving no trace, although his desperate crime had been committed in an active thorough fare and right under the glare of a half dozen had been committed in an active thorough-fare and right under the glare of a half dozen electric lights.

The body of the murdered man was faken to the Fifth street police station, where it remained over night. This morning it was removed to the undertaking shop of Anton Palmer, of 127 East Fourth street, by the direction of Joseph Agillo, the dead man's brother-in-law, who lives in Brooklyn. He said this morning that he would answer no questions regarding his brother-in-law, but intimated that he could tell a great deal if he had a mind to do so.

Flaconio was forty-five years old, about five feet six inches in height and quite stout. His clothing was perfectly saturated with "They say Grant will not withdraw unless "Then he's an impertinent young jackanapes! Mr withdraw! Among the articles found in his pockets were several diamond rings and other jewelry and more than $125 in cash, which are still in the possession of the police.

Early this morning the precinct detectives were out again and on the track of the murderer. They first visited the Italian restaurant at 8 St. Mark's place, where the supposed murderer was said to have entered after the s'abbing. The place was locked up tightly, but shortly after 9 o'clock Joseph Canizzaro, the cook, and also partner in the establishment, and Joseph Scheggo, a waiter, made their appearance. They were at once corralled by the detectives and taken to the police station, where Capt. McCullagh had a private interview with them.

derer had been in the restaurant the evening before

The next thing was to identify the body of Flacconio, which both Canizzaro and Scheggo did very readily. They both had known him well, and said he was a frequent patron of the establishment which is called "La Trinacria." Last evening, they said, he took his dinner there about 7 o'clock and that his companion at the table was Natali Sabatino, the other proprietor of the restaurant. Afterwards a number of others joined the party including Canizzaro himself, and for some time they drank wine together. About 8.30 the party broke up, Scheggo said, and Flacconio and Sabatino went out together, and an hour or so afterwards Sabatino came back alone. Both men swore that they knew nothing of the stabbing affair and that they were telling all they knew about it.

An audible grin ran through the audience, and the Court appreciated the unconscious hit so well that he made no effort to check the hilarity.

It was learned that Sabatino was also engaged in the feather duster and brush manufacturing business, at Third avenue and Thirteenth atreet, with J. He found Sabatino at work in the little shop, and when he tool him that he had come to arrest him for the murder of Antonio Flacconio the man turned ghastly pale and protested that he kase nothing Mrs. John Foley died in 1879, leaving a family of small children and a large fortune. He is considerably tailer than Flacconio, and rather slenderly built, but he has a dark brown mustache and his appearance corresponds well enough with the descriptions given by the witnesses of the affray last night.

Sabatino was taken to the police station and turned over to the tender mercies of Capt, McCullagh, who began to pump him in the same manner as in the case of the other counting having been made by the father as counting having been made by the father as executor in nine years.

An cruption followed, and John, jr., was dismissed from his father's employ.

Sabatino was confronted with the other two prisoners, who repeated their testimony in every particular. Sabatino turned pale, and was evidently very much frightened, for he lost all his bravado, and his hands trembled and knees knucked together as he stood in front of the Bergeant's desk.

He then contradicted himself in all that he had previously said, and admitted that he had previously said, and admitted that he had been drinking wine with Flacconic early in the evening in his restaurant, and that he had been there later before the place was closed up.
